Local high schoolers create new book series for kids which promotes positive self-image, diversity and anti-bullying.

WASHINGTON DC METRO AREA - Local sisters from Hayfield Secondary School in Fairfax County, VA., Nalani and Leila Butler recently published their first book. Paige Saves the Day, a children's book about a happy 3rd grader who despite being bullied because of the things that make her different, enjoys using her creativity to entertain her family and friends with stories in which she and her dog, Peppermint, are superheroes who always save the day! The book is recommended for second to fifth-grade reading levels and parents reading to their toddlers and young children.

Nalani (12th grade) and Leila (11th grade) collaborated during a summer break from school to develop culturally diverse characters and engaging stories for a children's book series which tackles themes of self-esteem, bullying, individuality, diversity, creativity, and friendship. Younger kids require adults to tackle such complicated topics sooner because dealing with social challenges are a part of their daily experience. The sisters believe their series can aid parents struggling to tactfully initiate discussions that will provide social and emotional guidance for their children.

"When developing the series, we felt it was important to incorporate themes currently impacting kids that sometimes may be uncomfortable for adults to discuss," stated Leila Butler. "We hope the books will make it easier for kids and adults to openly discuss these themes," added Nalani.

Paige Saves the Day is the first book in the series and is available now through BookButler Publishing Company (www.TheBookButler.com), Amazon and most online retailers, and select retail stores.
